Inspired by 1 John 4:18, “Perfect love casts out fear,” the track stands as a declaration of conviction. Musically, it blends Delta-blues-inspired guitar riffs, blues harp textures and revival-driven energy. BIO - LONG

After nearly a decade of hard-earned experience playing live shows from one bar to another, recording two EPs and dedicating his music career to Blues and Country, Steven Andrews entered a two-year season of reflection. Marriage, maturity and deeper questions about purpose reshaped both his life and his art.

What began as a search for artistic direction slowly became something more personal. During a flight, a medical emergency unfolded when a passenger suddenly needed urgent treatment. A flight attendant rushed forward and an announcement asked if a doctor was on board. In that moment, thousands of feet above the ground, the fragility of life became real. The situation stayed with him long after the plane had landed. It confronted him with fear, with mortality and with the question of what truly carries weight when control is no longer in your hands.

Not long after, another kind of crossroads appeared. A near-regretted industry deal promised opportunity but carried the cost of compromise. It echoed the old blues legend of Robert Johnson at the crossroads, where success was traded for something deeper. Steven chose differently. He walked away. Anchored in the verse from 1 John 4:18, "Perfect love casts out fear," he chose conviction over compromise.

Steven returned to his roots with clarity. Country and Blues had always been part of him. With roots in Virginia as well as Europe, he naturally identifies with American music, not as imitation but as identity.

Now Steven returns with a new single titled "Steal My Joy." The song is an honest reflection of his life, his faith and the lessons learned through fear, integrity and growth. It marks the beginning of a new chapter built on intention rather than experimentation.

Driven by Delta-blues-inspired guitar work and blues harp foundations, the track features strong, declarative lyrics that subtly reference the Crossroads story, but this time the narrative shifts. There is no bargain. There is no surrender. There is a decision to stand firm. "Steal My Joy" is a revival-driven Country Blues anthem carried by Steven's songwriting, energetic voice and authentic, unfiltered, handcrafted sound.

Looking ahead, his vision is clear. To create honest, guitar-driven music that reflects real life and real faith. Songs about fear, redemption, struggle and hope. Music that mirrors his own journey and belief. No gloss. No compromise. Just truth.

Steven Andrews is back, more honest, more grounded and more intentional than ever before.
